Game Players was a monthly video game magazine founded by Robert C. Lock in 1988 and originally published by Signal Research in Greensboro, North Carolina. The original publication began as Game Players Strategy to Nintendo Games (the cover featured a tagline that claimed no affiliation with Nintendo). The magazine evolved over the years, even spinning off a separate publication called Game Players Sega Genesis Guide when Sega entered the console market. These two magazines were later folded together into one magazine. In 1996, the magazine changed its name to Ultra Game Players and introduced a radically different format. At the end of its run, it turned into Game Buyer, before being cancelled in 1998. Games Players was a groundbreaking publication for its time - it was the very first independent monthly video game magazine of the 8-bit generation, it was not affiliated with a first party publisher (such as Nintendo or Sega). In addition, it was the very first video game magazine to feature a CG cover. Signal Research was eventually purchased by Future Publishing UK (mainly for Game Players) as an entry into the North American media publishing field. Future Publishing then operated under the name of Imagine Media in the United States. As the magazine evolved, the staff began to develop a zany humor that pervaded almost every videogame review and image caption. Readers' letters came at the beginning of the magazine and were often one of the highlights of the magazine. The magazine often included a "newsletter" with irreverent jokes about magazine staffers, as well as cartoons. The introduction of Ultra Game Players was intended to coincide with the release of the Nintendo 64 and Super Mario 64 (originally, the Nintendo 64 went by the name Nintendo Ultra 64).
